COUNCIL BUILDING COMMITTEE

Mayor Clement and members of the building committee consisting of Council-men Glaze, Carson and Wright spent a couple of hours yesterday looking around at the public buildings of the city. They called at the hose house being erected on the corner of Fourth avenue and Thir-teenth street and observed that the joist for the lower floor are most any where from two to three feet apart and one of them noticed to be only an inch and oneeighth wide. They reached the conclusion that was not a good start for a solid floor for a hose house and will report favorable to a change in that particular. Some of the other features of the work are said to be scarcely admissible and the attention of the contractor will be called to it.

Over in the Fifth ward hose house No. 4 was more nearly completed and less chance for observation. The floor had been completed and they could not exactly figure on the width and strength of the under

There was some attention paid to building stone as preparatory to dealing with the city building question. Some of the new buildings were visited and also some of the old ones examining the stone used. The mayor seemed to think the Carthage, Missouri, stone used in the Fairmount college building very fine, if not superior to any they saw for its cost. The question of the kind of stone that will be used in the city building, it is thought, may come up at the next meeting of the city council.

THREE SMAL FIRES.

Yesterday was fire day, and in the afternoon the boys made three runs. The first was a small blaze that originated in some unaccountable way in an unoccupied room over Cotter Bros'. restaurant. Mr. Cot- ance gave him a distinguished air, and many ter managed to get the fire out and the a foot passenger turned round and looked at boys started for the bose house. In a few minutes they got la summons from 1632 North Fourth, which proved to be a barn owned by Assistant City Clerk Smith. A horse barely escaped injury. The barn was beyond the water district and was a total loss. Origin of the fire unknown. The next call was at 8:30 p. m. to 115 South Ida avenue, which proved to be a livery stable. The cause of this fire was the explosion of a lamp but the flames were extinguished without throwing water.

Dr. Wendle and Whittock were called in and dressed the wound, the lad having been brought to the city immediately. The pysicians say his injuries are serious but they have strong hopes of his recovery. The little fellows pluck was generally commented on and characterized him as a chip off of the old block.

At 1:30 this morning the fire boys were called out for the fourth time for a bona fine fire on the corner of Wichita and Douglas. The alarm was a little late and a full blaze when the department was first posified. They did some rustling down, while his confederate, who had been first notified. They did some rustling, however, and saved about fifty horses, all that were in the barn. In order to get to the horses in the rear end the hose had to play over them to keep their clothing from The roof was completely burned off but no one was injured. The stable was conducted by Arnold & Neal, and the origin of the fire is unknown.

THE COLONEL'S MISTAKE.

A DARING INDIAN OFFICER ROBBED BY TWO BLACKLEGS.

He Was Tricked Into Entering a Lonely Boom and While There Was Desper ately Assaulted-How the Colonel Go4 His Revenge at a Warworks Show.

An Indian officer-as respectable and same a gentleman as ever went out to Hindostan to eat curry and rice and get bitten by centi-pedes and mosquitoes. Now, mark you, he was not a man full of fancies. His mind had not been tainted with the slightest breath. nor the shade of a shadow of the oriental superstition which a long residence in the East among a half civilized people is sup-posed to engender. No, he could give a friend a hearty grip of the hand or strike down a foe, and make no mistake about either.

Well, he obtained leave on furlough and well, he obtained leave on furloogh and came to England with his daughter, a pretty, dark faced girl of 16, whom he had brought over to complete her education. She had early given signs of a partiality for music, especially that of stringed instruments, and her father in this, as in other matters, did not stand in the way of her wishes be fied. So one fine afternoon up and out he strolled from his hotel in Holborn and walked down New Oxford street, leisurely smoking his favorite Trichinopoly cigar.

THE GAME THAT'S OLD. He had come out with the intention of selecting a suitable violin for his little Hilda, and as he thought of the pleasure which his gift would give her all the father's pardonable pride in his daughter could be read in that fine old sunburnt face. His erect bearing, military gait and general well to do appearhim from mere curiosity. A massive gold chain of crafty Indian work sparkled on his dark cashmere waistcoat and two gold rings were on his fingers, which had been presented to him by the Rajah of Gwalior, and in his hand he carried a stout Malacca cane, ivory handled.

Presently his eyes caught sight of a shop window where an assortment of violins, ban-jos, guitars, etc., stood temptingly inviting the attention of buyers. He halted a few minutes on the pavement with a view to inspecting the stock preparatory to walking in-

At this moment a man who, unnoticed, had "Among the Breakers" was presented dogged his footsteps on the lookout for ast at the Crawford Grand to a large "game," approached and also appeared to gaze at the show of instruments. "Pooh," he said, turning up his nose and addressing Coi. —, "that's rubbishing stuff there. I oughter know, 'cos I've been in the trade this last ten years and I knows a good banjo when I sees one. Maybe it's a banjo

The colonel was persuaded. He would not mind the walk, he said. The larger the choice the easier it would be to select a good one for his daughter.

"Yes, sir," said the man. "That's our specialty; we have sold hundreds this year for ladies, sir." And so they walked down, turned one street into another of the quiet by streets, of what he termed the office—a small room con-taining a table, a few stools and a large easy "Pray be seated, sir," said the man, pointing to the large chair.

The colonel thanked him, laid his hat and stick on the table and walked to the chair.

No sooner had he sat himself down when the chair yielded and down the colonel went, his legs and arms struggling ludicrously to regain a more dignified position. Quick as thought the man rushed on him and held him hidden behind the back of his chair, put his the soft cushion of the chair. To gag the colonel, bind his arms behind him and rifle his watch and chain, rings, purse and every article of value about his person was but the work of an instant.

SIX YEARS AFTER, In the night he was bundled into a carriage and driven away a couple of miles or so. When they reached a lonely spot he was set down, the gag was removed, and before he knew where he was the men had already driven away. Suffice it to say, the colonel made the best of his way to his hotel with feelings of ill disguised vexation and chagrin. All subsequent efforts at tracing his daring assailants were made in vain.

The incident he soon forgot, but the face of the man was indelibly impressed on his mem-

Six years the colonel spent in India; he then returned to London. The memorable day on which hangs the center point of this faithful narrative found him, with gukle book in hand, explaining to his daughter, in true John Bull style, the history of the figures in that well known collection, Mme. Tus sand's waxwork exhibition.

Entering a second chamber and turning round the colonel came suddenly face to face with his assailant of years ago. A second— and a blow from the colonel's heavy hand had shattered, to his horror, an unfortunate wax-work into a thousand pieces. The figure demolished by the colonel was a waxen effigy of the notorious Burke, who, assisted by another ruffian named Hare, carried on a peculiar system of violence and robbery, which frequently ended in murder. These miscroants were eventually captured convicted and executed. They are enshrined in the chamber of horrors.

The likeness in wax was so good as to lead the colonel to mistake the effigy for the living man, with the result above described. The mistake was made clear after due explana tion. The colonel was profuse in his apologies and offered to pay, but the proprietress protested that she was amply repaid by so good an advertisement.—Sheffield (Eng.) Telegraph

-WICHITA, - KANSAS.-

Oratory in Southwest Missouri. Down in southwest Missouri four or five rears ago a town had all arrangements made to whoop 'er up on the glorious Fourth. The sitizens had contributed in a liberal spirit, the day was fine, and the crowd large and enthusiastic. The orator of the day was a slim, cadaverous looking man frem St. Joe. To stand off and look him over, you'd have bet your last dollar that an old gander could have run him all around a ten acre field. There were some lofty spirits in town that day, and one of them was Jim Bucks, a mixture of patriotism, high jump, and rough and tumble. Jim sized the orator up, determined to have some fun with him, and took a seat directly in front of him as he stood on the platform to speak. The orator hadn't spoken a hundred words before Jim interrupted him. He did this twice more and was warned to go slow. He didn't go much on dreams or warnings, however, and watched for another oportunity. Pretty soon the orator said:

"And so this little band of pilgrim fathers faith in search of"-

"In search of skunks!" interrupted Jim. The orator made a long jump, lighted down on Jim Bucks, and inside of two minutes he had him licked so thoroughly that Mrs. Buckwould have passed him by for a splatter of pumpkin jelly which had dropped from a dinner basket. When satisfied that his work was thoroughly done, the orator returned to the platform and continued in the same calm and unruffled tones: "-liberty of speech and freedom of conscience, and they found them at Plymouth

He went on and delivered a really eloquent speech, lasting nearly an hour, and be was just concluding when Jim Buck crawled out from under a wagon half a mile away, where be had been laid, and queried of those around Replete with all the latest opera gems. Pretty
